PROMOTING INTERNATIONAL MOBILITY, INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING: NEW GLOBAL OPPORTUNITIES SCHOLARSHIP ANNOUNCED

R. Anderson Sutton, Assistant Vice Chancellor for International & Exchange Programs

The pandemic has brought challenges to every aspect of higher education around the globe. Its impact on international education--particularly on student mobility--is staggering right now, with travel restrictions, cancelled programs, visa uncertainties, to name but a few. All of UHM's study abroad and international exchange programs for summer 2020 have been cancelled; for the fall we are monitoring and hopeful, decision coming soon.

Along with these direct impacts on mobility, the world is facing not only a rise in positive cases of the virus, but also an alarming rise in populist isolationism and overt racism, primarily anti-Asian. As we are forced to stay at home, work from home, study online from home, we need to be especially vigilant in promoting and nurturing the tolerance and understanding that form the bedrock of international education. Some of this—perhaps more than we thought previously—can be conducted virtually, and we at UHM are already exploring new options in the virtual realm. Yet as circumstances permit in the coming months and years, we will still want to encourage our students to study overseas and UHM has lots of terrific international partner institutions eager to welcome our students!

Even when the threat of the pandemic has been addressed, though, there will remain other barriers to wide participation by UHM students. Following a discussion I had with University of Hawai'i Foundation CEO Tim Dolan in early March on fundraising to support student mobility, he accepted my invitation to join our monthly Mānoa International Education Committee (MIEC) meeting to speak with us. He ended his inspiring presentation and Q&A by announcing that he was authorizing $50,000 in UH Foundation funds to be earmarked for supporting UHM students to study abroad! With a mahalo nui loa to Tim, I am pleased to announce this fund has been established as the "Global Opportunities Scholarship" and will be awarded starting in spring 2021, or as soon as overseas programs are running again. Details forthcoming.

HELP

HAWAI'I ENGLISH LANGUAGE PROGRAM

Let us HELP make your academic dreams come true!

BY JOEL WEAVER, DIRECTOR

At Hawaii English Language Program (HELP), we offer training in academic English for students seeking entry into UH Mānoa or another U.S. university. Our Conditional Admission pathway to UHM means students can be accepted to undergraduate or graduate studies without submitting a TOEFL/IELTS score if they finish one semester in our highest level with a GPA above 3.7. Since our founding in 1971, hundreds of students have been admitted into UH and gained undergraduate and graduate degrees in their chosen fields.

As a unit of the renowned Department of Second Language Studies, HELP also is a lab for faculty and students of the DSLS to carry out research on language instruction methods and techniques. Many of our teaching staff are currently studying or have graduated from the DSLS, so they bring vibrant and research-based approaches to their classes.

As a complement to the undergraduate and graduate programs of the DSLS, HELP is the only location in Hawaii to offer the CELTA English teaching certificate course to aspiring English teachers. We offer customized language programs for a range of university and industry groups, as well as teacher training workshops. In developing multiple linkages with universities and territories around the world, HELP works to enhance the reputation of UHM throughout Asia and beyond.

Service Learning is a valuable connection for our students to the local community, and every HELP student must complete at least 3 hours of Service Learning each month.

HELP students volunteering at The Color Run.

Service Learning allows students to engage with the larger society in Hawaii, helps them to develop English communication skills in real-life situations, and gives them a transformative opportunity to make a tangible difference in the lives of others.

Our Internship Program is unique in Hawaii and rare anywhere in the world for ESL students. Students in our top levels can learn about professional development in an academic setting while gaining work experience through an unpaid internship. As they work in an industry of interest to them, they build professional skills and develop a clearer sense of themselves and their career goals.

In 2021, HELP will celebrate 50 years of providing outstanding full-service academic English training to students from around the world. Despite the extreme challenges facing International Education in this time of global pandemic, HELP is planning for another half-century serving as an entry point for international students to continue "Making academic dreams come true!"

YIJUN CHEN & KYOKO NAGATOMA

Hawai'i English Language Program (HELP) students Kyoko Nagatomo and Yijun Chen reflect on their experiences in the program and offer insights for incoming students.

Kyoko Nagatomo is a nontraditional student who decided to apply to study at HELP after her son attended the program five years ago. “He enjoyed studying English at HELP so much. When he came home at Christmas, he told me that there was a 65-year-old woman who attended his class. When I heard this, I prepared to attend the program myself,” Nagatomo laughed. After graduating, Nagatomo said she plans on becoming a Japanese teacher to work with English-speaking visitors and put her new language skills to good use.

In addition to providing preparation in Academic English skills, HELP offers internships and community service projects to encourage social and community engagement for the international students in the program. Yijun Chen reflected on her experience in an internship that HELP arranged for her with local marketing company Orig Media. “During my time with Orig Media, I experienced how American media companies organize their daily work and coordinate their team bonding,” Chen explained. In addition to the cross-cultural lessons Yijun learned in her internship, participating in Service-Learning events such as the Great Aloha Run Expo and helping with the Honolulu Marathon gave her the opportunity to practice English outside of the classroom. “At these outside events, I was given the chance to communicate with others and learn useful language skills through volunteer work,” Chen said. Due to her diligent studies and to taking advantage of these other opportunities provided at HELP, Chen has been accepted into the graduate program in the UHM Department of Communications in Fall 2020. She encourages other students to pursue their academic dreams with the HELP program.

MY STUDY ABROAD

BY ROBIN SOLHEIM

It all started when I spent two semesters as an exchange student in Nashville, Tennessee. I had an amazing time there during undergraduate studies and I was sure that I wanted to go on exchange again during my masters. I was looking at either Australia or Hawaii. Places with good universities where it's warm all the time, beautiful nature, beaches, and far away from home!

Back home in Norway, I am in the MBA program at Norwegian University of Science and Technology (NTNU) a UH Mānoa Ho'okipa Scholars Program Partner. The courses I took at the University of Hawaii at Mānoa were from the College of Social Sciences \(CSS\). I took a microeconomics class and three electives on mathematics for economics, macroeconomics and negotiation.

I really like the setup for the classes at the University of Hawaii at Mānoa, where most of the projects we did counted toward the final grade. In Norway, we mainly have one big exam at the end of the semester in all classes that counts towards our final grade.

I loved going to study abroad in Hawaii! I met so many new people who were nice and smart. I had the chance to improve my language skills and learned how to adjust to new places and cultures. Highlights of studying in Hawaii were the outdoor activities and fun sports we could watch on campus. I hope all students will study abroad in Hawai'i. They won't regret it!

Dan Ferguson grew up in the Seattle, WA area on a 10-acre farm in the shadow of Mount Rainier. Dan discovered his passion for International Education when he studied abroad for one year in Japan to teach English. That opportunity changed his career trajectory, and his life, as he subsequently worked in Japan for 11 more years. His dissertation is on “The impact of geo-political trends on US higher education cross-border partnerships with non-US educational institutions.”

Tell us about your role in the College of Social Sciences (CSS)?

I started working at the University of Hawaii at Mānoa in August 2019 to oversee strategic international partnerships and direct the international programs for CSS. In this role, I identify and promote collaborative relationships with non-US educational institutions in Japan, China, Republic of Korea, New Zealand, Cambodia and other countries. As part of our mandate, CSS is an active participant in promoting UHM as we develop and coordinate international programs in the CSS. This includes developing short-term programs for students from partner universities and working with faculty to develop research collaborations with core strategic partners.

What projects are you working on and what are your future plans?

I am working on a core strategic partnership framework for CSS that will be the basis for cross-border research collaboration and assorted other cross-border engagements. This could impact the CSS exchange agreements, in coordination with MIX, and the maintenance of mutually-beneficial cross-border partnerships. I'm continuing to work on developing short-term (1-3 week) programs with universities in Japan where we have Japanese students coming to UHM to participate in cultural learning classes. Part of this includes building long-term programs, such as our 1-year language and content area study with Meiji Gakuin University, one of our Japanese partners.
