HON 291: Susan Schultz

This course is about observing and listening to the world as it is--not through cell phones or ear buds or computer screens, but directly. The books assigned are about what we can learn by opening up our senses and our spirits to the world as we walk through it. You will write essays and poems, though probably not the kinds of poems you recognize. The texts we read will provide you with models for your writing. There will be constant writing exercises, in class and out. At the end of the course, you'll put together a chapbook of your work for the course. See here for images of chapbooks: http://tinyurl.com/ogjfqzg