²Comprehensive exams: The comprehensive examination, taken only with the consent of the appointed doctoral committee, is based on three of the four subfields of second language studies. Approximately one semester prior to the tentative date of the examination, the student must have submitted to the committee a detailed description, with bibliographies, of the specific areas to be covered.

⁴Foreign language requirement: Substantial, diverse experience in language learning (as well as teaching and researching) is a singularly valuable element in the intellectual and personal development of SLS specialists pursuing a doctoral degree. Such experience, reflected upon, is an extremely valuable supplement to the scholarly knowledge obtained through a doctorate in SLS.
