

HAWAI'I: KŌ KĀKOU MAU MO'OLELO (HAWAI'I: OUR TRADITIONS)

Explore early Hawaiian life. Students go back in time to study the Polynesians, their settling of Hawai'i, and their way of life before Western contact.

Module I: Polynesia: A Look into the Past Eileen Tamura

In this introduction to the Pacific Basin and to Polynesia, students study and evaluate theories of Polynesian origins and survey the spread of Polynesian culture. This module stresses the skills of using maps and globes.

Item #SS127, 87pp., ill., 1980, soft

Module II: Across the Sea Audrey Oi

This study of the Polynesian system of non-instrument navigation emphasizes the passing of knowledge from generation to generation.

Item #SS128, 113pp., ill., 1980, soft

Module III: Behold Hawai'i Audrey Oi, Eileen Tamura

In this inquiry into who the first Hawaiians were and when they arrived in the islands, students will learn how archaeological finds have helped to unlock Hawai'i's past.

Item #SS129, 60pp., ill., 1980, soft

Module IV: The Natural Environment Julie Puzon

This module surveys the history of the islands' native plants and animals and the impact of settlers on the natural environment. It focuses on Kauai and Kaho'olawe and includes Hawaiian poetry and legends.

Item #SS130, 59pp., ill., 1980, soft

Module V: The Hawaiians, the Land, and the Sea Jan E. Mills

REFLECTIONS OF HONOR: THE UNTOLD STORY OF A NISEI SPY

Lorraine Ward and Katherine Erwin with Yoshinobu Oshiro

Arthur Komori, a Nisei from Hawai'i, was one of two Japanese Americans recruited to the US Army Counter Intelligence Corps (CIC) to pose as Japanese sympathizers and spy on Japan's activities in Manila in the months leading up to World War II. When the war started, this Nisei served his country as a translator and undercover agent both on the front lines and behind the scenes in General MacArthur's headquarters, even while at home over 120,000 Japanese Americans were interned in relocation camps. Fortunately, Komori recorded his story in journals, reports, and even poetry. This long overdue account of a decorated Military Intelligence Hall of Fame inductee reveals an important chapter in the history of Japanese Americans during World War II.
